

The Wolf & the Seven Little Goats

Vojtěch Kubašta

Once upon a time there was a goat that was as white as milk, and this goat had seven very lively kids. Six of them were just as white as she was, but the seventh was coal-black. One day she put her back basket on her back and said: "Dear children, I am going to town to buy some juicy cabbage and fresh grass on the market and I am going to leave you home alone because it is a long journey. Lock yourselves in and do not open to anyone because there is a bad wolf wondering around." "Do not worry, mommy," they all called. "We will lock the door and do not let anybody in!"

The wolf ran away but he did not want to give up. He ate some chalk and his voice suddenly sounded soft. He also put some white flour on his paw. Then he came back to the cottage. "Open the door, little kids, it is me, you mommy! I just got back from the market and I have a back basket full of delicacies." His voice was soft, but the kids felt that something was not quite right. The oldest kid called: "Show us your paw." The wolf put his snow-white paw through the window. The kids felt assured and opened the door. They were horribly surprised when the grey wolf appeared in the room.
