Forest

Welcome to the forest. A lively-looking place, isn't it? A forest is one of the most remarkable communities on our planet.

Many plants, bushes, trees, mosses and lichens grow here. And there are so many animals! Some are hidden - usually in the bark of trees or in the soil.

Everything in the forest is interconnected. To grow, plants need light, water and nutritious soil. The fruits of plants provide food for small animals, which in turn provide food for birds and larger animals.

None of them could do what they do without the others. The smallest beetle or mushroom - all work to keep the forest healthy and self-sufficient.

The stag is king of the forest. His antlers are his crown. He uses them in defence and combat. They also tell us how old he is: the greater his age, the larger the antlers are.

Animals like calm surroundings. The forest gives them the food and shelter they need. The woodpecker is pecking beetles from an old stump. Those young wild boars are happiest in the mud or huddled together in the bushes.

While pretending idleness, the adder is looking out for a tasty prey. That lizard had better watch out. If things go badly, it will leave its tail with the attacker.

A forest is an incredible place packed with sounds, trees of many shapes, soft moss, prickly needles, and creatures shy and fearless. It's a great place for a game of hide-and-seek or a light snack of raspberries. Thousands of stories play out in its treetops, bushes and long grass. In the forest, nature comes to life in countless voices to form a perfect community whose every member has an important role. How does the forest world work? And why would we struggle without it? Take the woodland path and find out...
